...but this time, she'll be in front of the camera

Agnes Nixon, creator of ABC's daytime drama "All My Children," returns to the show as Agnes Eckhart, a long standing board member of Pine Valley Hospital.

Nixon, often called the "queen of the modern soap opera," created "All My Children" in 1970. She was a pioneer in daytime, writing for such shows as "Another World," "Guiding Light," "As the World Turns" and "Search for Tomorrow" before going on to create "One Life to Live," "All My Children," "The City" and "Loving." It was on these shows where Nixon brought many current and important social issues to the small screen.

For all her many achievements in daytime, Nixon was honored in 2010 with the Lifetime Achievement Award at the 37th Annual Daytime Emmys.

Nixon first appeared on "All My Children" in 2005 as the character Agnes Eckhardt, a role she created to celebrate the show's 35th Anniversary.

This time around, Agnes Eckhardt is admitted to Pine Valley Hospital where Cara (Lindsay Hartley) and David (Vincent Irizarry) tend to her. She also crosses paths with Erica Kane (Susan Lucci). Agnes has a profound effect on all of the characters she interacts with that changes the course of their lives.
