One Life to Lives

It's time to draw to a close Agnes Nixon's mission for One Life to Live: "...stories about richly diverse people as their lives intertwined, as they interacted with one another... To explain the hopes and hardships, the goals, fights, and failures that are ultimately shared by all mankind no matter how disparate their lifestyles." Be sure to tune in to see how it all plays out. Soapdom is still hopeful that Prospect Park (yes, remember them?) comes through with an online solution. So is Erika Slezak. "They seemed so full of hope in the beginning," she told TVGuide in regard to Prospect Park. "I do believe their intentions were honorable, but they bit off more than they could chew." And later, she expressed her optimism: "Actually, they still own the rights and I think they are still hoping to do something." She shared that she recently received a call from Prospect Park CEO Jeff Kwatinetz who said: "We're hoping somehow, somewhere that we can revive this thing." Soapdom hopes that, too! Till then, keep your eyes peeled on One Life to Live all this week. It's your last week to see it on broadcast television.

But will Victor and Sharon actually make it down the aisle? Find out when you watch The Young and the Restless this week.
